Nursery Reveal: Hawken's Professionally Striped Retreat

Interior designers are always putting their clients needs in front of their own, which is why their true style comes out while decorating their own homes in their signature way. Lindsay of Anyon Interior Design wanted to keep things clean, airy and modern but still include some vintage finds and family heirlooms for her nursery. Certain she was having a girl early in my pregnancy, she started designing a raspberry, turquoise/teal blue and grey nursery. When her ultrasound revealed she was expecting a boy, she tweaked her vision making the raspberry orange instead.

“I was inspired by the roman shade fabric from China Seas and my husband loves blue and orange together – I modified your traditional navy blue to a turquoise to soften the palette. I love stripes. I think they are so classic but also have a playfulness. Running the stripes horizontal felt unexpected and fun.” Lindsay says she gets emails from all over the world inquiring about her wall color, which is Benjamin Moore Grey Mist.

Lindsay purposely didn’t make the room too babyish, allowing it to be an easy transition to make it fit for a little growing boy.

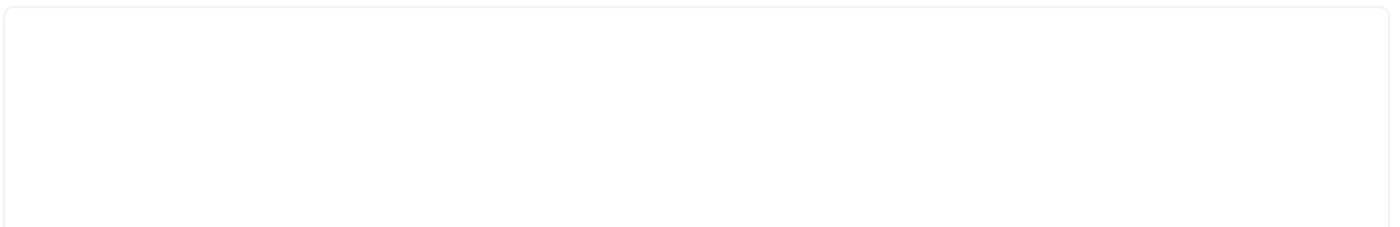

The bedding and pillow is from Serena and Lily, and the glider is custom upholstered in a Perennials outdoor fabric which makes it very practical and easy to keep clean. Lindsay reupholstered this antique ottoman in a Great Plains fabric. She lacquered the vintage McGuire Furniture side table in orange.

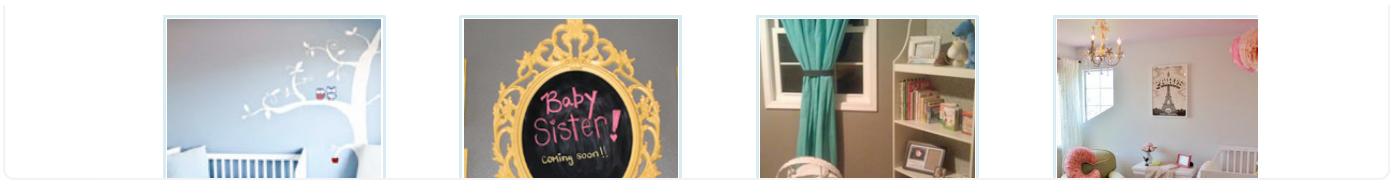

“The black and white photographs were taken by my husband on our honeymoon in Tanzania. My son loves to stare at the giraffes and lions as his diaper is changed.”

As a decorator, Lindsay advises parents to have fun and enjoy the nursery process. “Start early so that you are not stressed, the third trimester is exhausting without a deadline intensive design project!” Thanks for sharing Hawkens’ striped room with us!
